Cultural Branding for the Indian Market

About the program

Welcome to the Consumer Culture Lab's first executive program on cultural branding, where we use a cultural lens to understand, define and design branding elements, with the purpose of uncovering nuances that can help build strong brands. The program is situated at the intersection between culture and branding, to effectively build marketing strategies and identify opportunities present in the nuanced yet complex cultural context of India.

Using a multidisciplinary approach, the program endeavours to equip industry practitioners with a deeper understanding of not only managing India's multiculturalism but also developing great brands by utilising cultural undercurrents. Thus, the program would help in understanding a powerful way to build strong brands for the Indian Market. Moreover, it will also offer different approaches to conduct cultural analyses, to understand, uncover, and utilize cultural insights. The program offers a fine balance of academic rigor and business relevance, through multiple pedagogical approaches to create a space for collaborative learning and networking.

Objectives

The program emphasizes the importance of a cultural approach to branding in specific (and marketing in general), and its relevance in contemporary times, beyond the traditional and mainstream approaches to branding. The program objectives are to:

- Introduce the approach of cultural branding, and how it situates with respect to mainstream branding approaches.
- Enable participants with analyses and decision-making skills for crafting cultural brands.
- Acquaint participants with relevant research methods for generating deeper cultural insights.
- Provide a holistic understanding about the 'cultural perspective' of seeing the Indian market (which can be especially relevant for international stakeholders looking to explore the market).

Program duration:

This open program is designed as a 3-day residential program to be conducted on the IIM Udaipur campus. Participants are required to travel to Udaipur to attend the program in person. The program would cover the following broad topics:

- Situating cultural branding with other mainstream branding approaches
- Understanding cultural lenses to decode the Indian Market
- What is cultural branding (and what it is not)
- Crafting cultural brands
- Tools for cultural branding
- Developing a road-map for practising cultural branding

Pedagogy:

- A blend of experiential learning, case studies and participatory exercises.
- Sessions by International faculty/practitioners to share real-time applications of course concepts in the industry.
- Individual and Group assignments for hands-on practice of course concepts.

Target audience:

Industry practitioners at a middle management or senior management level, preferably in the roles of brand and product management or market research. This program would also be useful for advertising or public relations professionals who are keen to understand the significance of a cultural perspective in the domain of marketing and branding.
